Armed conflict heightens the likelihood and severity of sexual violence by men against women. But everyday gender relations, by making violence seem normal, even recreational, are also a factor that predisposes countries to militarization and war. Cynthia Cockburn asks what can women do to interrupt the continuum of violence?

Cynthia Cockburn is a feminist researcher and writer, and active in the networks Women in Black against War and WILPF.

16 Days of Action against Violence against Women is a global campaign with events held between 25th Nov – 10th Dec each year.
